LIFE OF ITURBIDE

Acquired Widespread Popularity On Account His Military Skill.

This historical personage is credited by many of the most prominent and distinguished Mexicans of the present day, notwithstanding the tragic termination of his glorious military career, with being the real author of the independence of Mexico. The immortal Hidalgo was the man who had the heroic intrepidity to proclaim it from the belfry of the church at Dolores, in the State of Guanajuato, in 1810, but the bitterest political enemy of Iturbide can not plausibly deny that he was the man who, long after Hidalgo had disappeared from the revolutionary struggle, consummated, by the prowess of his arms and political genius, the great work which the parish priest of Dolores had commenced ten years before and gave to Mexico a political existence among the phalanx of free and independent nations.

Iturbide was born in the city of Valladolid, now known as Morelia, in the year 1784. Sprung from a wealthy Spanish family, he joined the military service of Spain as a volunteer in the provincial militia at the early age of 17. At the outbreak of the revolution in 1810, he had reached the grade of lieutenant and, knowing that he was a young officer of promise and ability, he was tendered a command in the revolutionary army by Hidalgo, who was anxious to enlist him in the national cause.

Whether it was that he had some vague premonitions of disastrous results for the revolution, or that his high, chivalric sense of honor withheld him from all contact with those whom he considered as insurgents of a dangerous type, it is certain that he not only rejected these propositions, but even figured conspicuously afterward as a bitter and unrelenting antagonist of all those who took part directly in the rebellion or who were known to be affected by revolutionary tendencies.

He continued faithful to the royal cause for a long series of years and acquired a widespread popularity, as much on account of his daring and military skill as on account of his resignation from the service, at a critical moment, when various accusations were directed against him, incited, possibly, by this ever-increasing popularity.

The insurrection broke out again in 1820 and with greater intensity than ever, owing to the arrival of General O'Donohu from Madrid, bearing instructions, it was generally believed, to place himself at the head of the army and stamp out any sparks of rebellion which might be still smoldering in the disaffected districts and threatening to inflame the country into a conflagration as disastrous to Spanish power and prestige in Mexico, as that which had been frustrated by the success of the Spanish arms and the death of the leaders, in the first unsuccessful attempt of the preceding decade.

At this trying crisis in the history of his native land, Iturbide placed himself at the head of a numerous body of his fellow-countrymen, who flocked to his standard and willingly went forth under his orders to give battle to the soldiers of Spain, whom they had come to regard as their cruel, hereditary foe. A series of splendid victories, obtained over the royal forces, brought down a shower of honors and distinctions upon their gallant leader, and he was subsequently proclaimed Commander-in-Chief of the national forces, Admiral of the fleet, and finally President of the National Council in Mexico, in 1822.

On the 18th of March of this same year, Iturbide was raised to the dignity of Emperor of Mexico, with the title of Agustin I., but this distinction was only of brief duration, being revoked after a few days. This was followed by his dethronement, and, in the revulsion of the public favor, he was obliged to flee from the country. He was, however, enabled to escape from the machinations of his enemies and, embarking with his family for Italy, reached Livornia where he purchased a mansion becoming his rank.

He suddenly departed from this place on May 11, 1824, resolved upon returning to Mexico, presumably with the intention of regaining his lost empire. On reaching the Mexican coast at Sota-la-Marina, he was immediately recognized, notwithstanding his disguise, arrested, and given over to the civil authorities of San Antonio de Padilla, who at once condemned him to be punished to death. This sentence was carried out on June 19, 1824, just four days after his landing on the coast of Tamaulipas.

His memory is still revered throughout Mexico after the lapse of nearly one hundred years, and solemn exequies are yearly offered in all the principal churches of the country on the 27th of September, for the eternal repose of his soul, at which all the better families of each locality devoutly assist or are duly represented.—The Southern Messenger.

HIS NEW COAST LINE.

Colonel Lott Talks of Southwest Railroad at Fairs.

Col. Uriah Lott, who built the San Antonio & Aransas Pass and was interested in the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico Railroads and has another railway between San Antonio and the coast country in prospect, is among the visitors to the city. He is accompanied by his daughter and they arrived Saturday from Brownsville.

In the meantime Colonel Lott was in consultation with Judge Dilworth, a well known banker of Gonzales. Judge Dilworth is interested in Colonel Lott's new road, and it was in reference to its affairs that they were in conversation. Colonel Lott says this road's affairs are in good shape, and that progress is being made with it. Asked what he thought about the Texas Railway, which is projected to be built from San Antonio to Alligator Head and which is to cover a route that Colonel Lott many years ago projected, he said: "I will be glad to see some one build it. Its whole line from Victoria to San Antonio is covered by our charter. We won't have to build it if the Texas Company does. In fact, we will be glad to see that company build it."

"The Brownsville country is flourishing. The Brownsville Railway is taking in 200 passengers daily to Brownsville."

Colonel Lott and his daughter will remain in San Antonio several days and are guests at the Menger.—San Antonio Express.

OUR NEW FLIER.

Reached Brownsville Last Night two Minutes Ahead of Schedule.

Last night at 9:23 sharp, the new train rolled alongside the depot platform, having made the run from San Antonio in 15 hours and 23 minutes, with a wait at Placedo of 30 minutes, and stops at all the stations along the road.

It was a red letter day in the history of Brownsville. Geographically, Brownsville is out of the world, and it has always heretofore been a labor not lightly to be undertaken, to get from here to San Antonio—its Mecca. In the days of stage coaches, continuing until July 4, 1904, it was a matter of time and no small amount of trouble and inconvenience. With the advent of the railroad the distance was very much shortened, cut half in two, making Brownsville 24 hours closer to San Antonio, and the outside world in general. Now with the present schedule in effect, the distance has again been cut in two and we are in 15 hours of the world.

This means something for Brownsville in the future, as well as indicates that things have happened here to justify the change on the part of the railroad company.

People from all over the state can come here now and return home in something less than a term of years, which means that a great many will come who have not done so hitherto on account of the great time consumed, going and coming, and the wretched accommodations at the places along the road where they were forced to stop any number of times.

And a Sunday train also!

On the train last night came the San Antonio Daily Express, printed yesterday, a thing that has never happened before in the history of Brownsville—the arrival of a state daily on the same day it was published.

Through mail service to San Antonio on the new schedule, has not yet been completed, owing to the fact that the St. L., B. & M. does not at present carry mail further than Refugio, but it is certain that this gap between Refugio and Placedo will be closed within the next few days and through mail to San Antonio in 15 hours assured. Verily, Brownsville is moving!

DIAZ WILL STOP REVOLUTION.

Sends a Corps of Artillery to Torreon to Await Orders.

Mexico City, Mex., Oct. 27.—It was learned here late tonight that Minister of War Cosio, acting under the orders of President Diaz, has dispatched a corps of artillerymen, together with two machine guns and 20,000 rounds of ammunition to the Northern frontier. The detachment was ordered to proceed to the City of Torreon and there await orders.

It could not be learned authoritatively why the troops had been hurried to the frontier, but a rumor is in circulation in this city to the effect that all of those persons captured and convicted of complicity in the recent revolutionary agitations are to be summarily executed. According to the stories being circulated, the artillerymen have been sent to the scene there to prevent possible trouble.
